Apple announced last week that it is slashing the price of the iPhone 8 from $1,000, down to $750 (in the US). While we expect the phone to remain well-received, we're also sure Apple will still be able to sell a lot. That $750 price tag makes the iPhone 8 a lot more palatable to those who are prepared to pay at least $1000 for a smartphone — namely, us. But Apple's price cut still feels too steep to us, and we still think iPhone pricing is way off. The iPhone has to be $700 to be a compelling phone. $1,000 just seems too much. Here's why we think the iPhone should cost $750. You can buy almost half the stuff we like It should go without saying that we think Apple's iPhone 8 is a stellar phone — it's a huge upgrade to the iPhone 7, with some killer new features, a gorgeous new OLED display, and an upgraded A11 Bionic chip. (Source: The Verge; Top: The Verge) Still, we can get smartphones with better displays for $500. Advertisement For a $750 iPhone, we can expect a premium screen — something between 5.8 and 6.5 inches —
